The municipality opened a new public library on Tuesday as part of a programme to improve access to educational and cultural resources.

The facility contains reading rooms, computers, and a collection of books in Arabic, French, and English. Local officials said residents will be able to register for membership free of charge during the first month.

The library will host workshops for students and weekly cultural events. According to the municipality, the centre will operate from Sunday to Thursday and will publish its full schedule online.

The opening ceremony was attended by municipal representatives, teachers, students, and members of local civil society.
